The more, too, we consider the circum stances under which the nomination of DANIEL was made the more clearly does it appear that the people had determined to have for their standard-bearer a man whose election would mean something. When it and adjourned for five hours in order to await the completion of the platform. That vote " meant business." It showed that the members of the Convention had made up their minds to have a clear, distinct enunciation of principles before they nominated a candithe bit in their teeth and nominated the man whom they esteemed the most fitting to occupy that platform. In a word, the man and the platform were made the one for the other. The people intend to settle the debt is announced here of Mrs. Eleanor G, wife of Rev. T. G. Keen, D. D.
